QUESTION 1

Flights can change for any number of reasons, including cancellations, delays and diversions. These can be disruptive to your plans, which is why we require airlines to inform you about any changes as soon as they happen. This should be mentioned in the terms and conditions on your ticket.

In fact, airlines operating in Malaysia have a responsibility to take all reasonable steps to promptly contact you when your flight changes. If you believe sufficient effort was not taken to contact you about a flight change, you should take up the matter with the operating airline before contacting Malaysian Aviation Commission (MAVCOM).

Scenario

Joseph booked a flight to Australia for a vacation. Two weeks before his flight, ABC Airline sent an email to Joseph informing him that the flight has been re-scheduled. He was given an option to travel 2 days later or to obtain a full refund. Joseph wants to proceed with his vacation but is upset that his payment for the 2 days ground arrangement is now wasted.

Outline the potential courses of action for Joseph in managing this situation.

(20 marks)

QUESTION 2

You may one day find yourself being denied boarding on your flight – perhaps because the flight is overbooked or due to other operational issues. This can seriously affect your travel plans.

Scenario

Angustine, having valid travel documents arrived at the airport 3 hours before the scheduled time of departure of his flight. However, he was denied boarding due to overbooking by the airline.

Discuss Angustine's entitlement to compensation in relation to the situation above.
